The site chosen along the Columbia River is the best alternative beside Bellingham, to help build our export economy.

It was a shame that naive and gullible Seattle residents were swayed by junk science and/or by misleading propaganda from the local media, pressured by the extreme environmentalist. Due to this over-the-top activism, Bellingham's economy will stay stagnate, if not lose ground with the location moving to Lewis County on the Columbia River.

I wholeheartedly support the increase in responsible businesses, especially in the export area, where our nation falls short in the trade differential.
