Please do not allow them to apply a known neurotoxin to the oyster beds. You know the adverse impacts to the ecosystem. And even though further research is needed, there is already plenty of evidence telling us this isn't a good idea.

Historically, we've spent a lot of time having to say, "Oops -- there were unintended consequences" and having to deal with those sometimes horrific consequences. Let's not make that mistake again on a popular food source, especially since other companies have found ways to still grow their oysters without resorting to using poison on them.

Thanks!
