

Frank James

The lack of precision in measuring water use efficiency is a major oversight in the proposed rules. Water conservation particularly for agricultural uses that tend to be both large volumes of water and peak use at the times of year when water conservation is most needed have to be included in this process. This water use efficiency is also the most affordable alternatives to finding effective solution to our water balance problems.