

Carie Saunders

I strongly support WA state regulation of dams on the lower Snake and Columbia as well as dam breaching. I support all actions that improve water quality and lower water temperatures to improve salmon and sturgeon survival and spawning conditions.

Studies have shown climate change is the biggest threat to migrating salmon. So until we solve climate problems or fully switch to alternative energy, we must act aggressively to preserve and protect water health. We must reduce water temperature, and work towards solutions that sustain all remaining wild salmon fisheries.

We owe this to America's native and indigenous tribes, as well as our children and future generations - we CANNOT allow migrating wild salmon in Washington state to go extinct.
