

Robert Vadas, Jr.

Because general permits have helped reduce estuarine eutrophication in northeastern-USA states, such additional, efficient management would likely benefit Puget Sound, especially if it achieves a total cap on nutrient releases. This is crucial, given both climate-change impacts and ailing fish and wildlife population here, notably for the Southern Resident orcas.

-Bob Vadas, Jr.
Aquatic ecologist, Ph.D.