RE: Draft Environmental Impact Statement (DEIS) dated July 2019, for Changes to Total Dissolved Gas Water Quality Standards and Other Matters

Dear Director Bellon and Program Manager Bartlett:

We are writing because we believe that we must restore the lower Snake River and abundant chinook salmon populations in the Columbia Basin. This is an especially urgent need in order to help the Southern Resident orcas survive and recover. Rebuilding these salmon runs will also benefit tribal and non-tribal fishing communities across Washington State and the Pacific Northwest. Please accept these comments concerning the Total Dissolved Gas Water Quality Standard Draft EIS (Proposed Rule Change A019-02)

We strongly support Alternative #3 – with its language amended as noted below. We oppose all other Alternatives – 1, 2 and 4.

We ask the Department of Ecology to change its water quality standards for total dissolved gas (TDG) to allow TDG up to 125% in the tailrace of dams on the Columbia and Snake Rivers on a permanent and year-round basis, using a 12-hour average TDG criterion – and in time for the Spring 2020 juvenile out-migration in order to better support juvenile salmonid passage survival and subsequent adult salmon returns. The best available science shows that this TDG standard is biologically appropriate for both the spring and summer voluntary spill seasons.

The federal government's salmon recovery program in the Snake and Columbia Rivers has been a costly failure. Despite having spent more than $16B over the past two decades, Columbia Basin salmon and steelhead returns this year are among the lowest on record. These dismal returns are harming other fish and wildlife populations – including the critically-endangered Southern Resident orcas – as well as struggling fishing communities here in Washington State and across the Pacific Northwest. While bigger changes are urgently needed to truly protect and recover wild salmon and steelhead populations and the benefits they deliver to our region, increasing the TDG water quality standard to 125% is a critical near-term action in order to allow expanded spill and to increase juvenile salmon survival and adult returns in the next several years.

While we support Alternative #3, we oppose the following language that it includes and request its removal:

"In addition to complying with the requirements of this chapter, the tailrace maximum TDG criteria applied at dams operated by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers must be in accordance with legally valid Endangered Species Act consultation documents on Columbia River system operations, including operations for fish passage"

This language could undermine the permanent modification of the water quality standard by conditioning this rule change on a legally valid federal Columbia Basin Salmon Plan in the future. The proposed language above must be eliminated completely, or substantially modified to avoid unintended consequences in the future – including the reversion of the TDG standard to a level less than 125% in the event that a future Federal Salmon Plan is invalidated by a federal judge.

We strongly support Alternative #3 to allow TDG levels up to 125% of saturation in the tail race of each of the eight dams on the lower Snake and lower Columbia Rivers beginning in 2020 provided, however, that Ecology also eliminates the language in its proposed rule as discussed above.

Thank you for your consideration of these comments.

Sincerely,
