As a resident of NE Tacoma, I am deeply concerned about our air quality. We feel the impact from the Port of Tacoma on a daily basis. The PM2 is so heavy that we can see it on our patio furniture, in our window sills, and our furnace filters. We are keenly aware that these emissions are not good for us and that they are getting worse. The Port of Tacoma seems to be in an expansion phase and every new project or expansion puts our health further at risk. West rock represents one of the biggest polluters in our Port and deserves much more scrutiny regarding their expansion plans. US Oil is expanding, Targa is expanding, the LNG plant is coming, and now West Rock. I want to know why Ecology does not look at total picture in its permitting process? Our health demands that Ecology introduce policy that better protects our health by measuring cumulative impact.
