

Edward Ohlweiler

As someone who lives downwind of the smelter, I am against its creation for many obvious reasons. The impact to air quality, despite what projections may state, is undeniable. The question becomes: how much is too much? Overlooked are all the people who live not only downwind, but downstream. As particles in suspension get rained out of the atmosphere, they enter the watersheds. I, myself, grew up in an area of acid rain and vote not to repeat our past mistakes!
