

Charles Wilson

We live in an area filled with wildlife that needs to be protected. Where are their voices?

"The Endangered Species Act is meant to eliminate threats to a species' survival, such as habitat loss, . . .insufficient regulatory activities, and natural or manmade factors. The goal of the law is to reduce or eliminate these threats so that species no longer need the law's protections."

What would happen to the Woodland Caribou, an endangered species that exists in "northeastern Washington (in Pend Oreille County), and northern Idaho, and is the only caribou herd that ranges into the contiguous U.S." The lynx has also been listed as a state and federally threatened species occasionally detected in Pend Oreille County.

It is our duty, and responsibility to preserve our wildlife's natural habitats. Who's going to do a study of their future for them?

Ref: (https://ballotpedia.org/Implementation_of_the_Endangered_Species_Act)