

Kevin Trimpe

I am opposed to the smelter. There will be a significant and irreversible impact on the environment. I have small children who's health and development may be impacted by the emissions and products brought to this area. It's not prudent to sacrifice the health of a great population for the profit of few. I understand there is a study on the ecological impact, but that is limited to projections and science we have at this time. The silver valley in Idaho "thought" they were fine at the time. Now it's a large superfund site being paid by taxes to clean up, the companies are long gone by the time outcomes are understood. I think studying the impact on the ground water system and air emissions is vital to understanding long term effects.