I'm worried about dumping any pollution into Washington and North Idaho air. I have the feeling that pac west is being allowed to do this only because our air quality base line is good. I wonder if any studies or thought has been given to our bad air quality during the last few summers wild fires or during the winters inversion layer when we have air stagnation. Will all the pollution just build up until the weather changes? People are not even supposed to burn wood stoves at times or go outside at all when the air particulate count is around 400 to 500. Anyway lest let Canada have the mess.
