

Andrew Stevens

Why are we making things more expensive when market forces are already demanding cleaner emissions from the device using the fuel? You already failed with Ethanol in our gasoline, and this will simply make gas more expensive for a negligible benefit.

You also risk damaging our motorcycles and small engines that were never designed to run with higher ethanol content.

Dept of Ecology should be concentrating on the electric future instead of looking back at the 1980s.