

Anonymous Anonymous

Washington needs to stop following everything California does. It hasn't made California a more enjoyable place to live and it won't benefit Washington either. This plan will put many mechanics out of business. The electric grid can't handle the additional load. It will be costly to build new generation resources, even more so since all the utilities are following the same timeline. How much will it cost? Let's see your data. How does the loss of load probability change? This is a horrible idea being proposed by horrible politicians.