Reading through the comments regarding mandating only electric powered vehicles in Washington, they are overwhelmingly negative. Will the comments matter? Doubtful. The people making the rules don't value the comments and do not represent the people. That being said, mandating all electric vehicles in Washington is a terrible idea. No one technology can be the answer for everything. Even diesel and gas engines have their own strengths and weaknesses. Electricity also has dubious infrastructure to handle vastly increased demand. This becomes even more critical when combined with the green energy advocates desire to eliminate coal, tear out dams, and negative views on nuclear power. This law is unnecessary and should not be passed.
