This is obviously a proposition gleefully submitted by the scientifically disingenuous climate change folks. Our transportation infrastructure has been in place for decades and has been under constant improvements. This includes significant improvement in the storage methods used for fuel at service stations and distributors. We remember when vapor capture systems were added to filling hoses. Catalytic converters have been so successful that they are now a prized item for thieves. Suffice it to say, we have the most sophisticated and safe systems for providing citizens with transportation options.

Abandoning all this is not only not warranted it is downright stupid.... promoted by individuals that have not thought this out or have been bribed or otherwise coerced to support this.
