

Dwight Motz

The proposed regulations effectively banning sales of non-EV vehicles is very short sighted and will be even more destructive to the environment than allowing and promoting further development and environmentally conscious innovation of internal combustion ultra low emission engines. The proposed policy is short sighted and ignores the environmental damage of battery production and the huge required surge in electric energy production that such a transition will require. I am against this proposal.