While the idea of EV's sounds great we are not and will not be ready for them in the timeframe proposed currently. The infrastructure will not be in place nor is the EV technology ready to replace gas vehicles. It's a great idea whose time will come, but, it can't be rushed. A new F-150 Lightning can only tow a load for 2 hours before depleting the battery completely. That is not a viable substitute for a gas powered F-150 which can tow a load clear across the state, and, if need be, re-fuel in a matter of 5 minutes as opposed to an 8 hour period needed to recharge a dead EV battery. Allow the technology and infrastructure evolve organically without placing unrealistic mandates.
