

William Neptune

My family is a very active hiking and camping family. We frequently take our children on 6 to 14 days trips into the mountains with extra fuel and would not have the ability to charge an electric vehicle. The new EV requirements would make this impossible. I believe the market will shift to EV's on its own because of the many advantages but think requirements will ultimately be far too restrictive in many circumstances. I also think requirements would reduce research and development by car manufacturers. That could result in slower advancement in EV efficiency and less reduction in EV cost.