

David Leavens

Requiring electric vehicles is only changing one environmental issue for one that is unproven as to the effects of mining the minerals and providing the electricity of which we don't have that capacity and won't in the near future with the closing of coal fired and natural gas fired plants. Nuclear seems to be a dead issue and solar or wind is not reliable. All of this is pushed by extremist in the Democratic party without any foresight on how it will effect the environment and the associated costs. We have pretty much cleaned up the burning of fossil fuel and I don't see how EV vehicles will be any less or will probably be more damaging to the environment than the existing gas powered vehicles.