

Thomas Cammann

Your proposal of eliminating gas vehicles is a serious mistake. The first issue is how will the electric grid handle everyone charging their EV's. I cannot handle the volume. Second, how can everyone afford these vehicles? They are too expensive. Third, how will all the people living in condos or apartments charge their EV's? Even if they all could run electrical cords to their EV's, how will you stop the theft of cords? With the crime the elected officials leave unchecked it would be impossible. So multiple unit buildings will have to build charging stations? How much will the cost of this affect peoples ability to cover daily expenses? How about being realistic on what we can do!