

Damon Gerfin

These changes and the attempts to ban the sale of gasoline and Diesel vehicles are foolish. These attempts are also very tone deaf to people that are struggling currently economically as it will put the availability of personal transportation out of financial reach for most middle to low income families. The cost of maintaining an electric vehicle far exceeds that of a conventional gas or diesel vehicle, making personal vehicle ownership something for the privileged and Rich only. Most of these changes are also being made by persons that do not ride public transportation because the public transportation in the state of Washington is very inefficient and very few people use because of it. If the governor and any other politician that support these changes were forced to use public transportation for 90 days they would very much rethink these changes.