I do not believe enough research has been done to know that our electric grid will be able to support all the battery charging this will cause. The PNW has too many power outages, some lasting many days, how will we get our vehicles charged to get to a warm place? How will people in apartments or the single homes without garages be able to charge their vehicles? The making of the batteries is very destructive to the environment. I have not heard how the disposal of the batteries will be dealt with. I'm not comfortable with the possibility of getting stuck on the pass in an electric vehicle. What will become of the gas powered existing vehicles? Just seems too quick to pass such laws on the whim of our government when my common sense says it's too large a change in too little time. The government officials need to not fly around the country and clog the streets with motorcades as Buttigieg and Dr. Jill Biden were here in the same weekend, did they fly together? Joe Biden is coming to CA and OR starting today through the weekend, couldn't they have arranged Dr. Jill, Buttigieg and the President to all be here on the same plane and arrange their schedules to attend all their functions? What a waste the Gov't is and they expect us to do as they mandate without the proof that it is necessary.
