

Lawrence Trimble

Two things, firstly the EV vehicle mandate. So I've heard that we will implement a new EV vehicle purchase requirement either concurrently with California in 2034 or perhaps two years earlier. Either one is unbelievable. It will make a shortage of used gasoline cars by then, and many of us will not be able to afford the more expensive transportation. Also, the federal government can't keep subsidizing everything, including electric vehicles. Lastly, the government can't be an energy monopoly, it's pure socialism and it is already jeopardizing our kids' future. Think about the billions of dollars per state already being spent for public charging stations, when it becomes mandatory, boy will we get hosed financially. Also the 3rd world countries hand digging cobalt and the safe storage of used batteries, sounds like a whole can of worms to me. Next topic: natural gas, which flows freely in the earth, can be tapped easily, and while not perfectly safe, is not full of after the fact problems. Why are we condemning it? I'm sick and tired of these liberal crazy agendas, and hoping they won't be able to be carried out.