As someone who had an electric car it had its faults. We had a recall on the battery that couldn't get replaced. Where do they toss the batteries when you do need to replace them? In the ground which is worse than having a gas powered car. California is having an electricity problem since putting this in place and now you want to do it here and cause the same issue? Yeah not the best option here. And forcing people to only pick electric isn't going to go well. I traded in my electric vehicle for a gas powered car because of all the issues I was having along with the recall that never got fixed. I actually love my gas vehicle better. It's not running up my electric bill.
