

Trish West

I am in a quandary as to why this mandate is so important now or all. I do not support this now. With all the homeless, crime, lawlessness, silly wokeness attitudes and etc. is having an EV mandate/Bill really necessary? I feel that this supposed urgency should be directed to problems that actually need to be addressed, is implementing the status of EV actually going to impact our state, or the world, now or ever? The air pollution goes all the way around the world, not in sections, if not everyone joins the fight how does a little, that is very expensive even help? Definitely disagree.

Clyde Carpenter

Following California is ridiculous. The average EV costs $66,000. You are just hurting the poor among us by requiring EV's.

Creating the charging infrastructure to support this mandate will be expensive and could take years. California, at this time, cannot even supply the electricity they need to charge all the current EV vehicles.

It will cost billions to upgrade the electric grid that will be needed for new EV charging.

If you were truly serious about the environment, you would use the cleanest, most renewable energy source-- nuclear power plants.