I OPPOSE this proposed rulemaking changes because first and foremost, THIS IS NOT CALIFORNIA! California is stupid! Why should we be adopting stupid California rules? Second, motor vehicles wouldn't make as much pollution if you didn't do stupid things like charging tolls for the carpool lanes. Because of the tolls, cars get backed up idling in the other lanes. Third, the stupid mass transit projects also cause a lot of cars to be idling because of construction. You cannot count the emission of cars that idle due to road construction since you supposedly are causing them to idle for a later "greater good" (even though I don't think these mass transit projects will result in any greater good). And the emissions of traffic idling from an accident is out of the ordinary, so how can you blame cars for that? Just plant trees to take care of the greenhouse gases.
