

Richard Kelly II

This is irresponsible environmentalism. One, we are one of the cleanest countries on earth and in the developed countries achieving lower carbon levels than other developed countries and the target levels set by the last Paris Accord.

The cost to the country and the middle class will be devastating. The infrastructure and technology has not progressed enough for this. I am an Electronics Engineer and Senior Tech Project Manager with a PMP credential. Going to war with the fossil fuel, gas, and oil industries before we are ready to transition is dangerous and not well thought out. We were an energy producer and if the present administration had not of went to war with the oil industry we would be in better shape now and able to support our European friends overseas who will be greatly impacted but current conditions in Europe. People will die this winter.

I am for responsible environmentalism. And this act is not responsible at all.
