

CJ Murdock

I agree that changes need to be made but not at the expense of the states people and industry. I know as an older person on a fixed income I in no way could afford to purchase an electric car or afford to have a charging station installed where I live. All of my vehicles are diesel and get amazing mileage and yet I am paying the highest price for fuel. It seems so short sighted on the part of the Washington state government to impose this on its people. As it is now people need to choose if they can afford to shop for food or buy fuel to go to work. It is not the people who work in Olympia who will suffer it the the families just getting by.

How can a state just cut off a lucrative revenue stream like petroleum products. What will replace that revenue? I know I may be forced to leave the state I love so I too can afford to survive. In my personal opinion I am getting fed up with Olympia bending to the will of one city in the state. We have a large agriculture industry that will crumble with out petroleum. We do not have the technology to solve the challenges that the state want to forced on us.