

Duane Goehner

While well-intentioned, cost effective alternatives are not readily available and the brakes need to be put on more restrictions until realistic options are available that don't hurt the average individual who is trying to make ends meet in these hard economic times. New rules need to be coupled with realistic options. As it is now, my air conditioner lost it's refrigerant a couple of years ago and I cannot afford to recharge in light of my other obligations. The heat issue on the other side of the state causes health risks, so I often cannot drive in the summertime.
