

WilliamThe United States, and Craven

The United States, and Washington state in particular, have taken extensive steps to reduce pollution. Developing nations like China and India have made little improvement and they can significantly reduce global contamination with relatively inexpensive methods. The developing world must be made to pay their share of cleaning up the environment. The US has done enough. We do not deserve to suffer without air conditioning or refrigeration because of poor decisions made in foreign nations. This proposed law must be rejected.
