Heart of America Northwest (Gerry Pollet)

And thank you for providing the water. For the record I am Gerry Pollet, executive director of Heart of America Northwest speaking on behalf of Heart of America Northwest and our members across the region tonight. Thank you for holding the meetings and including Q&A session which very helpful and I want to repeat some of what I said last night and go into different area in tonight's comments. But for the record it is vitally important that the Permit include environmental impact analysis under SEPA of all the new elements and significant changes that have occurred since the 2012 tank closure waste management EIS was issued and being adopted under SEPA for this permit revision. That document as I said last night never considered the impacts of leaking tanks and certainly did not include any analysis of a leak release plan and I appreciate your pointing me to the right place for the leak response plan last night. In reviewing it today I can say without any doubt that it doesn't read like a plan. There is no commitment to actually respond to a leak in the what timeline is practicable to empty all liquids from a leaking tank as soon as practicable. And rather it includes such comments and commitments, if you can call it that, as the parties will discuss and consider advantages and disadvantages, and that's a quote, of different options or even whether or not to comply with the law and remove liquids from leaking tanks. That is not a compliant permit. And it is not a compliant leak response plan. As non compliant with the commitments in the settlement with Heart of America Northwest and, for the record, tonight I can say we are almost certain to file legal challenge if the leak response plan does not mitigate and have commitments that are formal and clear and reviewable to remove as much pumpable liquid as is practicable as soon as practicable from leaking tanks. And that does not include having a discussion about whether or not to comply with the law. Thank you, times up I will yield to the next person.
