Susan Watkins

That is a great message, Andrea.
I have a serious expansion on it!
50 Years in real estate and property management make Sustainable Development a terrifying concept, especially because I know it"s origin!
As a long term member of BIAW, I look forward to your call! Susie 206-650-3908

This is actually a thinly veiled property grab,
It is the eroding of Property Rights prescribed right out of AGENDA 21! Written by Gro Brundtland, who was VP of the International Socialist Party, and Premier of Norway till 1996, this World Order Document was adopted by the UN as it"s formal Agenda for the 21st Century . One could download it from the UN website till it became less than approved by the free citizens around the world. It has been updated by the UN and ratified again as AGENDA 2030. In DIRECT contradiction to our fabulous Founding Documents, it criminally erodes all the brilliantly designed principles that raised our country to its unparalleled creativity and productivity
Without understanding this document and its stated insidious purpose, no one should be in a government office!

Allowing government to take charge of our personal property has as much practicality and wisdom as retiring the entire work force!

Washington needs more homes, but that becomes harder to achieve every time more land is taken off the table or new requirements are added to the development process. At some point, we need to acknowledge the tradeoffs. If these rules make it harder to build housing, they will make housing more expensive. We can prepare for future climate impacts without undermining housing affordability. Ecology should revise this proposal to ensure climate planning doesn"t come at the expense of the homes Washington families need today.