

Barbara Segal

Create a network of people and vehicles that will pick up the food that restaurants and grocery stores are about to throw out to redistribute those who are in need.

Change laws about food labeling as far as "best by" or "sell by" dates. Most of these are meaningless and cause people (and grocery stores) to throw out perfectly good food.

Create a campaign to ask people to trust their noses and eyes when it comes to whether food is good rather than throwing things out because the date is "expired"

Encourage use of Buy Nothing to redistribute unwanted food locally, household-to-household