

Jennifer Riedmayer

Personally, I would like to see areas where there are trash and recycling containers to also include a compost area for food waste. I have seen this in other countries when traveling. The waste could then be stored and residents for either pay a small fee to purchase the compost or the local govt/ nonprofit could use it for more urban gardens.

Developing a way for individuals/ communities to secure its own food is really important, especially in times like these where produce/ supplies are limited.