I am opposed to spreading biosolids only a few miles from my house since I rely on my well for drinking water. No government agency has tested my well or anyone else's in my neighborhood in Onalaska to check for contamination. If this dumping is to continue this testing should be done. Also, if biosolids are so safe, why aren't they used in cities on public parks and vegetation around the state capital and other government buildings as proof that they are safe and don't cause odors in the neighborhood??? Doing this would convince me that biosolids are safe and inoffensive.
