

John Reeves

It's clear that environmental sustainability requires effort - the effort to ensure industrial recycling and landfill diversion technology doesn't produce new waste streams while attempting to reduce existing ones. Source separation of food packaging from waste food minimizes environmental harms at a reasonable cost. Let's streamline that rather than merely accept existing, or raise permissible compost contamination levels, to accommodate a flawed industrial technology for separating food waste from packaging waste at less cost.