I am against the planned development. It is another example of developers taking advantage of historically marginalized communities and the "affordable" properties in favor of new high-earner incomers. If you want to know why there is a housing crisis, why homelessness is rising, you just need to look at these kinds of developments and the lack of accountability that our local and federal governments impose these developers. Many people, including myself will get pushed out. Dept. of Ecology and other governing bodies can do better than this. It is also known that this developer pays people to write 'positive' comments, that should be investigated.
