

Katie Smith

The site of 781 Walker Way, Port Ludlow, WA, should most definitely remain on the Hazardous Site watchlist by the State of Washington. This is a private water/sewer District with no other oversight to protect customers. Soil characteristics in this area suffer from serious migration of groundwater and the State needs to help monitor this site for the health of the public.