

Gary McLean

The idea of raising all-female triploid Steelhead trout in Cooke Aquaculture's Washington State net pens makes tremendous sense on multiple levels. The fact that the species is native to the region and will be sterile provides for minimal environmental risk and a successful transition to this new species will allow local fish farmers in Washington state to contribute to the national goal of increased self-reliance in the supply of sustainable seafood to the US economy. A win for all on many levels!!