I support aquaculture whole heartedly in all its forms. It is more sustainable than any other farm raised animal protein and is the only we can hope to keep our world fed. The US is woefully behind the curve when it comes to aquaculture and needs to catch up to remain competitive with china, Norway, canada etc.

90% of seafood is imported, many of which from asian countries with very little quality control. It's time the US become a major player in the aquaculture space and cooke and washington state can be a great example for the rest of the country.
