

Richard Stoll

As an environmental scientist of some 43-years, the author of several books that address issues affecting near shore salmonid fisheries, and as a person who testified before the Washington State Pollution Control Board some years ago regarding the disposition of fish after Atlantic salmon escapes in Puget Sound, I am absolutey opposed to the use of Puget Sound and Juan de Fuca waters for salmonid aquaculture. The Cooke NPDES permit application should not be allowed to move forward.