Although I prefer Atlantic salmon and believe they're a better quality and more practical species to farm, I fully support Cooke's production of triploid Rainbow trout. With the harvest pressure and continuous sport fishery closures on the natural stocks of pacific salmon up and down the west coast, we won't have fish to consume without farming/aquaculture, just like we wouldn't have beef, poultry etc to consume without farming. Time to wake up and think practically and not emotionally on this subject.
