

Deborah Carbery

Cooke's net pens, which have a long-history of operational failure and are located right in the path of migrating native salmon, steelhead and orcas, are a huge risk to these threatened species as they disrupt the ecosystem, spread deadly diseases, and pollute Puget Sound. Do not allow these filthy fish farms to operate in these waters. We must work to restore wild steelhead populations and this will only help decimate wild fish.