

Gwen Ammon

The Spokane River has been cared for with regular clean ups since it went through a large toxicology cleanse many years ago. Currently it offers a clean source for the surrounding wildlife as well as a cool place for my small child and I to spend hot summer days. The idea of it being polluted by excess chemicals, further polluting the ground around it that we all walk and live on, is disgusting. It is a completely inappropriate and garishly ugly proposal to allow companies to dump into our river. If they are creating so much toxic waste, they should be held responsible for finding alternative, healthier production processes. My river is not their scape-what precedent does that create?