We live in a world where anything can be done. Oil spills getting cleaned up with fungus. Plastic being converted into textiles. Certainly there is a way to both fuel the ships and eliminate/upcycle the waste created by the ships in order to save ALL of our environment (because we all know that it's all connected). And if not, perhaps the cruise ship industry should simply die. I mean, if it cannot come up with better solutions that are up to date with the world we're living in, then it needs to go the same way as the dinosaurs.
