

Leslie Spurling

Clean air and water are critical for the health of the entire planet, of course, but in Puget Sound we can see the impact up close. In this highly trafficked and virtually enclosed body of water, pollution is obvious. Whether noise or waste, the pollution takes its toll, and we all see the results. Yes, we need all vessels using this critical waterway to take all necessary steps to leave no pollution behind.