

Gabriel Sims

This terrible regulation is written in a manner that is too general. This encompasses so many small operations that is onerous to rural Washington and suburban residents that source some food outside of a grocery store. It has the appearance to allow for the persecution of small operations that have very little impact on ground water due to no standard measure when too much deemed present. This seems purposeful to allow the department overreaching power. This regulation should be rewritten to avoid allowing for oppressive pressure from a government entity.