Ecology should allow permittees to accrue "level of effort" points for requiring private development to implement water quality treatment above what is currently required by the permit (i.e. requiring treatment in the first place for PGIS or requiring enhanced treatment when only basic treatment is required). This would be an initial upfront non-structural action by a permittee (code revision, etc.) but result in significant follow-up water quality improvements and provide for another effective avenue for permittees to comply with this permit requirement while still fulfilling the overall objective.... Improved water quality in our receiving waters.
