

Shelley Morrison

The Green River is a unique WA waterbody, on account of its pristine condition, its high water quality, and unique recreational & ecological values. Waters of the Pacific NW are increasingly under threat and fish and wildlife populations are threatened and endangered. The Green River should be protected as habitat for steelhead & salmon. The old growth trees alongside the river are critical habitat for species such as the northern spotted owl. I urge you to designate the Green River as an ORW and to give it the highest level of protection, Tier III(A). Thank you for considering this comment.