

Jody OConnor

Innovative solutions should be identified and shared with the public and stakeholder businesses/industries for feasibility input. Solutions such as regulations requiring businesses to remove heat from the Columbia and its tributaries when their operations have contributed to increasing temperatures. Incentivize development and use of technology that uses heat energy that would (or does) go into the river to power warehouses, machinery, office buildings etc.